

This Amazon review of My Value Creation Journey: An Autobiography of my Work was written by David R. Koenig who is President and CEO of the DCRO Risk Governance Institute.

“I refer to Bart's Knowledge-Building Loop and the concept of Corporate Fade in nearly every presentation I make about the need for organizations to innovate and take risks continually to achieve their purpose. Readers of this book will quickly understand why as they see their applicability in all economic environments – especially in today's extremely challenging world.

Bart and I first met when he lived outside of Chicago, and we served together on an advisory board focused on advancing corporate performance. Since then, we've stayed in close contact, but I never knew that his summer residence was in my hometown until I read this book. In the first chapter, I gleaned several other insights that helped me understand the source of the dogged yet genteel way he makes his arguments.

Bart's ideas are nothing short of genius. You'll do well to read this and his other works, then doggedly pursue their implementation wherever you serve, be it for-profit, non-profit, government agency, or informal association. Your organization will be better off because of it, as will those who depend on your success.”
